Brewster McLeod Architects designs with luxurious, green living in mind

Brewster McLeod Architects is excited to announce the completion of a phenomenal new home in Aspen, Colorado. Located on 4.5 acres, the 14,000-square-foot home demonstrates the firm's ability to customize larger floor plan designs with energy efficiency and balance in mind.

Expertly sited on its wooded lot, the home provides total privacy for its owners, as well as views of the Aspen Highlands Ski Resort. The mountain home features four bedrooms, six bathrooms, full guest's quarters, an interior lap pool, exercise area, home theater and recreational room.

This Aspen home's design exemplifies principal Jamie Brewster McLeod's belief that concept, design and construction must all be in sync in order to meet new standards of energy efficiency and maximize the use of green building materials. Incorporating more efficient building products is not an afterthought, says Brewster McLeod, but rather a crucial element of the design that comes naturally.

Brewster McLeod understands that there will always be a demand for larger, luxury residential projects. But she also believes that these homes present an optimal opportunity to launch new trends in smart and sustainable residential design that will set new standards for tomorrow's homes.
