Architecture Firm Enjoys Aspen's Designation

Last week The Wall Street Journal labeled Aspen the most expensive town in America. Brewster McLeod Architects, Inc. (www.brewstermcLeod.com) is capitalizing on the unique circumstances.

One of the strongest tangents of the Aspen real estate market are extremely high-end homes — upwards of $15 million and above. Aspen-based Brewster McLeod Architects, Inc. is thrilled to be part of this real estate surge. This year, a 14,000-square-foot home designed by architect Jamie L. Brewster McLeod closed in Pyramid Point Estates.

In addition, Brewster McLeod Architects, Inc. recently released drawings for an 11,900-square-foot home in a nearby subdivision that went under contract even prior to construction. Both designs have pushed Brewster McLeod Architects to reach beyond the conventional “mountain home-style” to create projects that inspire worldwide attention.

The Wall Street Journal — HOMES

By Nancy Keates : Friday, March 4, 2011

The Most Expensive Town in America

Defying the national housing slump, Aspen's prices are rising. Why the glitzy ski enclave is outpacing the Hamptons, Beverly Hills and Palm Beach.
